It's appropriate to say that Ancient Rome and Greece were the Meccas of an entertainment.

The best board games associated with these antiquity places are...

Tabla Lusoria

It's the game for those, who prefer plays with no fuss. Easy, comfortable and quick. And it can also be played with the smallest ones in the family.

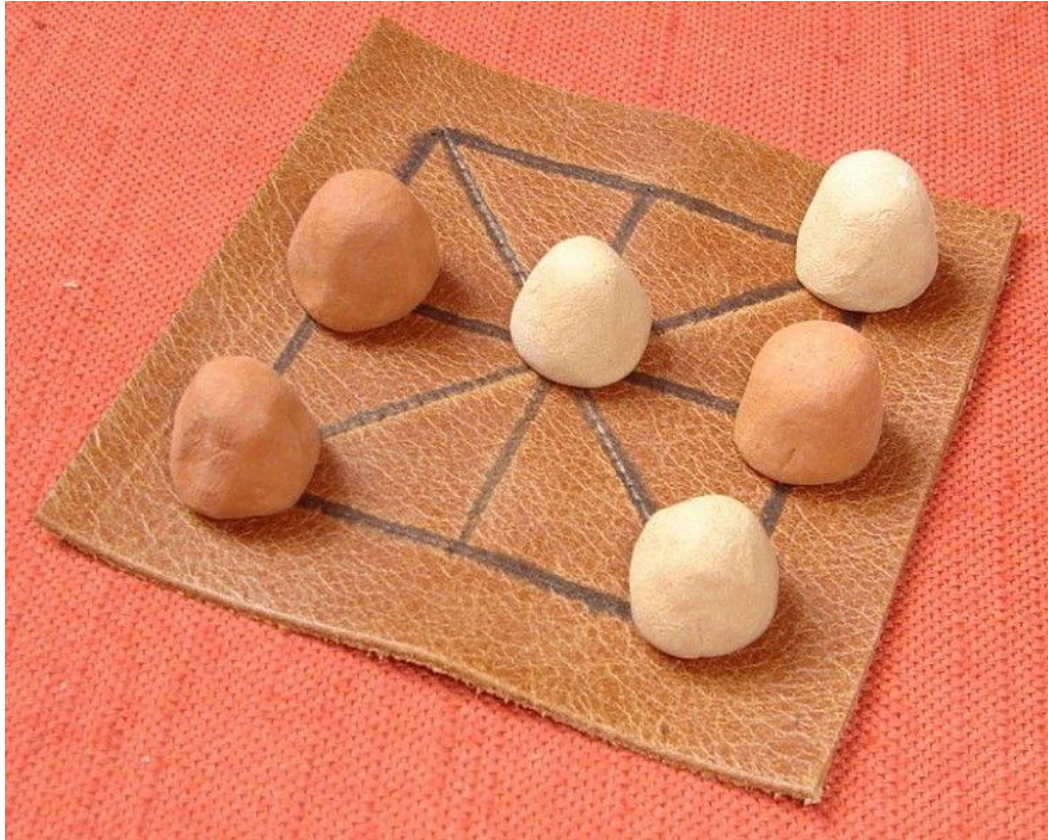

Fun fact: Some gamers say, it's the simplest and the weirdest board game in the entire world.

Latrunculi

It's an exciting game for two games' lovers that appreciate the classics and a bit of fierceness. Not only this game has long-lived history, a rich culture within and resembles original chess and draughts, but it also provides perfect opportunity to win... a war.

Terni Lapilli

Some believe Terni Lapilli to be a predecessor of Tic-tac-toe also known as Jogo do Galo in Portuguese.

Well, and if it's not... At least they share a lot of similarities (as well as some differences).

Calculi-Ludus Calculorum

“The game of stones” is a thrilling strategy play that provides a healthy amount of challenge to the players. Worth to note, sometimes referred to as the Roman checkers.

Interesting fact: It's believed that in the Ancient Rome this game had a strong association with math science.

Petteia

Petteia (meaning – Polis, City, Pessoi, etc.) is a competitive game that is very similar to the Japanese game Hasami Shogi – Japanese chess Interesting fact: Aristotle, tutor to Alexander The Great, once wrote: “a citizen without a state may be compared to an isolated piece in a game of Petteia”.
